Subject: NCI Bid Board Posting - Service Contract for Sony SH800 FACS

The National Cancer Institute Division of Cancer Epidemiology and Genetics Laboratory of Translational Genomics (LTG) lab. LTG conducts focused studies to explain the functional significance of particular regions of the genome conclusively identified in cancer-specific genome-wide association studies (GWAS) and linkage studies in high-risk families. The overall goal of the lab is to develop new approaches to the study of the genetic basis of cancer and its outcomes. Specifically, NCI is investigating the genetic basis of strong association signals identified in candidate gene association studies, loci identified by linkage analysis of high-risk families, or genome-wide association studies. The Sony SH800 FACS cell sorter is used by the Laboratory of Translational Genomics to sort live cells for CRISPR genome editing. This equipment is used by NCI/DCEG/Laboratory of Translational Genomics. The overall goal of our laboratory is to develop new approaches to the study of the genetic basis of cancer and its outcomes. Specifically, we are investigating the genetic basis of strong association signals identified in candidate gene association studies, loci identified by linkage analyses in high-risk families, or genome-wide association studies (GWAS). The fluorescence-activated cell sorter (FACS) allows individual cells to be sorted from a heterogenous population based on light scattering properties and fluorescent signals. One of our planned uses for FACS is to sort cells that have been genetically modified by CRISPR genome editing.
